

Effect of Online Platforms in Literature

Samyuktha Rani C S

English Language, University of Kerala

Abstract- Literature and the media are two interconnected cogs, although they may be clearly and discretely distinguished from one another. They are said to complement one another and work in various ways to achieve the same goal. Present-day communication and information channels, including social media, television, and the internet, are collectively referred to as "media." Media, according to Mathew Arnold, is literature on the fly. However, we now see that the contrary has also come to pass. The media today has a responsibility to express the feelings, emotions, and reactions of the public since whatever is presented in the media today serves as the foundation for what people believe, feel, and say. For media, no field is unimportant. It has a huge range. There is no denying its effectiveness in bringing about a rapid shift in the media is always contemporary with society. On the other hand, literature is also undergoing metamorphosis and affects fundamental change through reaching people's hearts and souls. However, today's literary works are considered a machine. It is being played with on social networking sites.

INTRODUCTION

In terms of media in general, prior to the 19th century, the press served as the public's sole source of information. Press at that point and media were once interchangeable terms, but with the proliferation of information sources today, the term "media" has come to refer to all current sources of information. Today's media, whether electronic or print, has a significant impact on every aspect of our lives, and it has advanced beyond only informing us to also entertain us. Today, the media has a responsibility to express people's feelings, emotions, and reactions since whatever is shown in the media shaped what people think, feel, and say. For media, no field is trivial. An item that touches the lives of many people are more important than everything. The range of media is enormous; any event occurring anywhere can generate news, from something as serious as war to something as frivolous as fashion. The media is obsessed with famous people. Even something as trivial as sneezing, coughing, etc. makes headlines when they do it. The only reason why all of the world's famous people are so tall and imposing is because of the media. Numerous journalists now focus on creating novels and books. Technology development has fundamentally altered and is still altering the relationship between media and literature, highlighting the need for new literary practises. In light of the aforementioned assertion, it may be claimed that literature on social media is one such practise that has killed literature in general and not only print literature. By default, it does not encourage the creation of classics, and time is a major factor in this. To create a classic, one needs a lot of time, leisure, and mental effort. Long pieces of work are unaffordable in today's fast-paced, mechanical lifestyle, yet literature and the types of books it finds are also essential via social media platforms is made available.

Utilisation of Social Media in Literature

Today with innovative headway and with the development of plenty of media stages, writing has obtained another structure. Today we have more scholars and perusers than maybe we at any point had before, the explanation being simple accessibility of writing and devices to communicate one's progression of feelings. In the old times schooling was accessible to just a special minority; no one but they could peruse and compose so the writing of those times proliferated exclusively through oral means, from one to the other and to the next. In this cycle it would get adjusted, changed and once in a while declined into something useless. To go by the insights, 2.5 billion books are distributed every year and aside from these books on paper we have on-line writing in the type of PDF, web journals, video blogs, Facebook, Instagram, Twitter, Youtube and so forth.

The literature of modern times is much faster than the literature of old times. Faster in terms of propagation and creation. It has crossed all barriers of time. Everyday we see thousands of new creations which are circulated through different online platforms and thus it reaches the audience in a jiffy and the writers also get instant responses from their fans in the form of likes, shares and comments. Thus the social media literature has become literature of instant gratification. In today's fastpaced life when it is difficult to manage time to meet friends and relatives, the social media provides a good platform to bring forth the Shakespeare within you by driving you to outpour your creative spurt of feelings. Thus social media has proved to be a launch pad for many writers. Today everybody has access to all the knowledge of the world; you can get material on-line even check and rectify it if you know how to use the on-line tools so writing a 3-4 line post is not a big deal for those who have had a proper formal education. To quote it on a positive note, these platforms tempt those who can write but would not like to involve professionally into it and also the people who have no literary instinct at all. An important quality of such literature is, it is quite effective. It acts as a rabble-rouser. Most of such literature is on current issues and so people instantly feel connected to them. People react to them effusively and the posts become viral. Knowing the power and efficacy of these posts, people post fake things to serve their interests, especially to vilify someone or to run a hostile propaganda against some party or organization. Also, these platforms offer experimental literature. People write in whatever way they can. There is no restriction of form or style. It is totally informal. People are free to express their thoughts and ideas the way they like without any fear of editing or criticism. They can write poetry, drama, fiction etc. and share it with the world.

Facebook is likewise a virtual entertainment stage with 2.6 billion dynamic clients consistently. It was established in 2004 with a thought of associating the understudies of Harvard College. Later on it was stretched out to different universities including Elite level. In any case today it very well may be utilized by anyone who professes to be over 13. The highlights on this application are helpful for individuals in giving vent to their abrupt surge of feelings and sentiments. It likewise gives the office of making bunches so that individuals can share their perspectives with the similar local area. There are hundreds of gatherings on FB for every single sort of individuals. As far as composing and writing is worried, there are bunches for a wide range of writing darlings working with there admittance to various sorts. These gatherings help the clients to distribute their accounts, fork out direction to the individuals who are sincerely searching for it also, energize them with positive remarks. On one hand, it ends up being an incredible stage for beginner journalists to parade their abilities and on the other, the experts use them to publicize and advance their works and furthermore to give protection to the growing essayists. Besides, it being a tremendous stage, anything that you present is accessible on the entirety of your FB companions what's more, to anyone who needs to bring a slip look into your profile except if you have made specific security settings. Thusly, to try not to turn into everyone's fool individuals twist around in reverse to pen down something right and adequate. Facebook should be, truth be told given the credit for delivering authors in army and likewise for embracing and engendering abstract movement.

Instagram is a stage for web-based entertainment fiction with numerous opportunities for labeling, connecting also, conveying. Numerous instances of brief tales with most interesting sub class on Instagram is flash Fiction. Fan fiction is a peculiarity which is on ascent in web-based entertainment and internet posting, The thought of Fan fiction allows un experienced essayists an opportunity to communicate their innovativeness like stories around characters, settings, plots or audit on their number one shows, books, motion pictures. Today Youtube is the biggest web-based Online entertainment Site on the planet. The site surpasses two billion perspectives every day. This is a decent stage for sharing and posting scholarly articles. It gives a discussion to individuals to interface, illuminate and move across the globe. With the arrival of free social networking sites like face book, Twitter and WhatsApp on the social media messaging and micro blogging constantly give rise to newer and silliest of abbreviations, truncated spellings in English language. Historically languages evolve steadily with the passage of time. Online technology becoming a driving force of rapid creation and proliferation of new words. We are increasingly changing nouns and adjectives to verbs. The speed at which such changes in the language are occurring made us think that how different will English language over the period of time. The new improvement of virtual entertainment Writing demonstrates that Online entertainment fiction is a independent type of artistic creation online entertainment fiction has a place with scholarly cycle. Yet Virtual entertainment is successful for sharing data and, surprisingly, as a method for distributing without going through the interaction It makes parcel of issues and issues like 'Plagiarism". It is hard to screen these Sites as there are such large numbers of them for various purposes. Web-based entertainment may be the subsequent stage in the realm of Writing in which individuals can share quicker and to more extensive crowd, however numerous pundits go against to the new move.

CONCLUSION

Literature is a profoundly unique circle that reflects values social and social life. Social media has turned into the space where new writing emerges and we are as of now seeing the ascent of new classification in the writing. It tends to be social media fiction and can be characterized as a type of writing changed through different interpersonal interaction services and portrayed by the utilization of assortment of apparatuses, for example, labeling quick cooperation with crowd and lays out correspondence among per users and imaginary people. Web-based entertainment destinations have become parts of our lives. They offer a chance to battle bad form, construct networks and impact the universe of writing.

REFERENCE

- [1] Miller, Daniel. Making social media matter. In Social Media in an English Village. JSTOR. 2016(pp. 122-149).
- [2] Pankaja, D. "Literature and Social Media: Effect of Social Media on English Language & Literature". Journal of Higher Education and Research Society: A Refereed Journal, Vol. 4, No. 2, Oct. 2016, pp. 44-51